

Texas Election Data Guide

Last updated: July 15, 2026

Texas provides statewide county and state-level data on election results, voter registration, and turnout through the Secretary of State's Election Results/Data page. Data from recent elections are typically provided through a Civix dashboard while historical data are reported in static HTML tables. In the data descriptions below, we identify the locations of the data and their dedicated webpages, and detail the variables provided by the state and by Harris and Dallas counties, noting for each dataset how it is published and what to be aware of when using it.

The datasets available through the Secretary of State's Election Results/Data page and described in this guide are as follows:

Notes for use

- + Texas reports its most recent election results—typically the past two years—in a Civix dashboard. No data export option is provided. The page is an Angular app with a public, unauthenticated JSON API behind it. Election results can be scraped with plain curl, but note that payloads are base64-wrapped and heavy polling might trigger rate limiting. Historical election results are provided in static HTML tables which can be easily scraped with an HTML parser.

Early Voting Totals

Description

Daily county-level counts of early in-person and by-mail votes for elections from 1996 to 2018 are provided (note that totals for more recent elections are available in the Election Results Archive). Unofficial early voting figures at the county-level from 1988 to 2022 are also available.
